JEALOUSY AND LOVE

By DOROTHY DIX, The World's Highest Paid Woman Writer

In a recent sensational divorce case in which a man was seeking to have the matrimonial fetters which bound him to his wife severed, part of the testimony introduced consisted of some exceedingly affectionate letters which the woman had written to another man. The wife admitted the authorship of the billets-doux, but claimed that she was not in love with the man, but had simply written these letters with the sole purpose of awakening her husband's love, by making him jealous.

The woman's attitude was interesting because so many other women hold in the same fallacy the jealousy is the hand maiden of love, instead of being its assassin. This leads them into committing innumerable follies, and while one can hardly credit the idea of a wife who would put such a weapon as a bunch of incriminating letters into the hands of a husband whom she suspected of being tired of her, it is nevertheless true that many women are silly enough to engage in flirtations just to make their husbands jealous.

They have an idea that by tormenting a man they can keep the fires of affection alight in his breast, and, at any rate, it is a cop to their vanity to see that they still have the power to make their husbands register fiery passion, as our moving picture friends say.

Such women believe that jealousy of a woman is a proof of a man's love for her, and that as long as he cares for her he does the Othello act. They are on a par with the drunken laborer's wife who wept that her husband no longer took enough interest in her to beat her.

They do not understand that, in reality, stripped of all the chaff that novelties have woven about it, jealousy is nothing but suspicion, and that instead of its being a compliment to its objects, it is a deadly and unforgivable insult. No man is a jealous of the women in whose faith and honor he trusts. It is when he becomes doubtful that he grows green eyed at the approach of other women, and possibly there may be a psychological moment during courtship when a man's jealousy may be aroused advantageously to the end that he is made to realize that he must stake his claims to a woman's heart to keep some other man from jumping them. In other words, it is clever tactics for a woman to make a dilly-dally lover come to the proposing point by affecting to care for some other man. This is one of the fair moves in the game of courtship, for so peculiarly are men built that many a one only finds out that he wants a woman when he sees some other man apparently about to snatch her from him.

But while it may be a crafty thing to rouse a man's jealousy before marriage, after marriage it is a fatal mistake. The heart must have some place to rest in utter security, for perfect love is perfect faith and trust, and a woman can have no other hold upon a man so great as his belief that her love for him is as unflinching and true as the stars in Heaven, and she disturbs this faith with jealousies and doubts, and fears at her peril.

Hence wives who try to wake their husband's jealousy are either fools, or they will be watching. Moreover, they are lacking in some of the essentially fine feminine characteristics, for there are only two reasons that can prompt a woman to torture a man by rousing a passion that eats like an acid into his soul. First, she must do it because there is something cruel and catlike in her that prompts her to play with the heart the low easily as a cat does with a mouse, careless of the suffering she causes.

-Or else, she does it because it flatters her vanity to be able to show off her power over a man. She likes to see him sulking in dark corners while she smiles radiantly on another. She enjoys watching him grow white while she pins a rose upon another. She glows over his anxiety and disappointment when she breaks an engagement with him, for some trivial cause, and she delights in thinking how easily she can pull him back to her whenever she is ready. He is, for the time being, nearly a monkey on the stick that she makes jump for her amusement.

But before she knows it the woman who enjoys making a man jealous goes too far. He gets tired of being made a spectacle of and when she tries to whistle him back he will not come. His faith has been shaken, his trust abused, his most sacred feelings outraged and he declines to be martyred any longer.

The unmarried woman who tries to make her sweetheart jealous plays with a fire brand, but the married woman who tries to make her husband jealous starts a conflagration that she cannot put out, and that almost invariably burns her home down to ashes. For the married man's honor, and name, as well as his heart are in his wife's hands, and when she tosses these about as a jester does his balls, she is literally playing with destiny itself.

Back of her husband's love, and overshadowing it, is his pride, and it is enough to make him feel that it is a disgrace to have his wife's love for him, and his faith in her, and his having made him the mock and jest of his friends, as the flouted husband always is. For we pity the woman whose husband is faithless to her, and amuses himself with other women, but we jeer at the man whose wife has affairs with other men.

Somewhat, the man who cannot keep his own appears to us in the light of a weakling, and this adds the final touch of friendship to the act of the wife who diverts herself by making her husband jealous.

Every now and then some disguised prophet arises who tells women that the way to keep their husband's love alive is by always keeping them guessing, and that a wife should never let her husband feel sure of her. Never was there more fatal counsel given. Exactly the reverse of this is true.

FRANK LEWIS GLICK IS KILLED IN THE WAR ZONE

Mrs. Helen A. Glick, sister of J. W. Abbott, received the following telegram this morning: "Deeply regret to state that a cablegram received from abroad advises of the death in action of First Sergeant Frank Lewis Glick, marine corps, on June 3. Body will be interred abroad until the end of the war. Please accept my heartfelt sympathy in your great sorrow. Sergeant Glick nobly gave his life in defense of his country."

"GEORGE BERNETT, Major General Commandant." Sergeant Glick enlisted at the outbreak of the war, in the marines. He chose the marines because, as he said, "I was told they would be the first to see service in France."

Sergeant Glick had been recommended for a commission. He enlisted in Marshalltown, Iowa, the family's former home. His brother, George Abbott Glick, enlisted in Ogden and is now in Texas in the aviation service. Fletcher Glick of Ogden is another brother.

BRITISH SHIP IS TORPEDOED

Transport Ansonia on Way Westward Is Sent to Bottom by German Submarine.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The British transport Ansonia, owned by the Cunard Steamship company, has been torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine several hundred miles from the British coast, while on her way westward, according to private cable messages received here today.

Ninety members of her crew were picked up by another steamship eastward bound and landed on the English coast, the message said. Search is being made for forty more of her crew who are reported missing.

The Ansonia was last reported as sailing from a British port on May 25. She was commanded by Captain R. Capper.

On June 15, 1917, while under convoy, the Ansonia was attacked off the English coast by a submarine. Struck by a torpedo, she made port in a sinking condition, but was repaired.

The Ansonia was a steel four-masted steamship of 1533 gross tonnage, built at Newcastle, England, in 1907. She was 450 feet 6 inches long, 54 feet 2 inches beam.

CLOSE-UP OF RHEIMS

This map shows the forts that are holding the German hordes back from Rheims, the famous cathedral city of France. Three of the forts, Brimont (1), Courcy (2) and St. Thierry (3), were captured early in the German drive. The British who are holding Rheims, however, have so far prevented the Germans from entering the city. Fort de Noye and Fort de la Pompelle, on the south, must fall before the Germans can take the city. Even then there is a range of hills to the south called "The Mountain of Rheims" which is excellently fortified and capable of stemming the German advance beyond the city for an indefinite period.

What is Castoria

CASTORIA is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. The Children's Panacea—The Mother's Friend.

The Kind You Have Always Bought, and which has been in use for over 30 years, has borne the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher, and has been made under his personal supervision since its infancy. Allow no one to deceive you in this. All Counterfeits, Imitations and "Just-as-Good" are but Experiments that trifle with and endanger the health of Infants and Children—Experience against Experiment.

Dr. Edwin F. Pardee, of New York City, says: "For several years I have recommended your Castoria and shall always continue to do so, as it has invariably produced beneficial results."

Dr. N. B. Sizer, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I object to what are called patent medicines, where maker alone knows what ingredients are put in them, but I know the formula of your Castoria and advise its use."
